At Dwelley Farms, the market day starts around 5 a.m., as soon as they are able to see what they are picking. They get busy picking for four or five hours before loading up the trucks and making the long journey from the Brentwood, Calif. area to Sparks. Almost all of their produce they bring to the Sparks Farmer's Market is picked the same day to ensure that they sell only the freshest fruits and vegetables available. Their great quality is what Louie Palacios says keeps people coming back to their stand year after year.

“We have a big line every year of people waiting to get our produce,” Palacios says. “I think it's the freshness and quality of our food. It all comes up the same day as the market.”

Dwelley Farms biggest seller is their sweet white corn which they specialize in. Palacios says as soon as people see the corn, that big line starts to grow. Dwelley Farms also specializes in four varieties of green beans and a variety of tomatoes which are also big sellers at the market.

“Everybody likes our tomatoes,” Palacios says. “They're so sweet and delicious!”

Palacios says aside from the great business, he really enjoys coming to the Sparks Farmer's Market for the fresh food, the goodies and all the nice company. He says he enjoys going new places, eating new things and experiencing the community here.

“I don't just like it, I love it,” Palacios says. “The people here are always friendly. It's fun.”
